The woman intimated that she was really anxious to play for those stakes, and preparations were made for the game. It was agreed that the driver should deal the cards, and Bart insist ed that the half dozen passengers should stand up in a row twenty paces away, so that he might detect any attempt at treachery. The teacher seat-ed herself on a mail-pouch that Bart had dragged out for that purpose, and with his rifle resting across his lap he settled himself on one knee a short dis-

Each player was now entitled to four cards, to be dealt face up, and Bart caught the ace of clubs, while to the teacher fell the seven spot of diamonds. The highwayman next caught the five-spot of hearts, and his face flushed and he smiled confidently, for the first card dealt to him was a five-spot, and he now held a pair. The teacher drew the deuce of diamends. Bart showed his elation when the next card that fell before him proved to be the five-spot of clubs. He now had three fives, and he was sure the game was his. To the teacher fell the four-spot of spades. Her luck was, indeed, wretched, but she didn't seem to be the least disconcerted as she looked over at Bart's pair of fives and then down at her seven-spot high.
